

31-1 Section QUIZ

Continue to:

Section QUIZ

- or -

Click to Launch:

31-1 Reptiles

- 1 Most reptiles reproduce with
- a. external fertilization and external development.
 - b. internal fertilization and internal development.
 - c. internal fertilization and external development in water.
 - d. internal fertilization and external development in shelled eggs.

- 1 Most reptiles reproduce with
- a. external fertilization and external development.
 - b. internal fertilization and internal development.
 - c. internal fertilization and external development in water.
 - d. internal fertilization and external development in shelled eggs.

- 2 The yolk sac of a reptile egg functions as a
- a. membrane that exchanges oxygen and carbon dioxide for the embryo.
 - b. membrane that stores wastes produced by the embryo.
 - c. source of nutrient-rich food for the developing embryo.
 - d. shock-absorbing fluid-filled sac protecting the embryo.

31-1 Section QUIZ

- 2 The yolk sac of a reptile egg functions as a
- a. membrane that exchanges oxygen and carbon dioxide for the embryo.
 - b. membrane that stores wastes produced by the embryo.
 - c. source of nutrient-rich food for the developing embryo.
 - d. shock-absorbing fluid-filled sac protecting the embryo.

31-1 Section QUIZ

3 Reptiles are

- a. ectotherms.
- b. endotherms.

31-1 Section QUIZ

3 Reptiles are

a. ectotherms.

b. endotherms.

31-1 Section QUIZ

4 The two parts of a turtle or tortoise's shell are the

- a. terrapin and plastron.
- b. carapace and plastron.
- c. carapace and terrapin.
- d. terrapin and carapace.

31-1 Section QUIZ

4 The two parts of a turtle or tortoise's shell are the

- a. terrapin and plastron.
- b. carapace and plastron.
- c. carapace and terrapin.
- d. terrapin and carapace.